ACKNOWLEDGEMENT

First and foremost, I would like to offer my sincere gratitude and thanks to Professor Dale Pinto, my principal supervisor, Dr Prafula Pearce, my associate supervisor, and Professor Jeff Pope, my former principal supervisor, for their intellectual and professional guidance during my doctoral journey at the School of Business Law, Curtin University. I am extremely fortunate to have these learned supervisors who had shared their critical views and expertise that helped me in the whole process of this thesis.

I am also indebted to my employer, the Inland Revenue Board of Malaysia (IRBM) for the financial and moral support rendered, which enabled me to focus and complete this study successfully. As a special note, I would like to convey my sincere appreciation and thanks to the IRBM Chief Executive Officer, Kolonel (K) Tan Sri Datuk Wira Dr. Hj. Mohd Shukor Hj. Mahfar for his encouragement and advice in my doctoral study. Also, I would like to express my gratitude to Dato Muhammad Sait Ahmad, Datuk Sabin Samitah, Dato' Abd Aziz Hashim, Datuk Mohd Nizom Sairi, Madam Siti Rosnah Md Hashim, Madam Cheong Peck Lian and Madam Aina Hartini Hussin for their relentless support, and it is indeed a privilege to have these good people as my senior colleagues.

My special thanks go to Dr Sotimin Muhalip and Dr Gunasegaran Muthusamy, my mentors, who had guided me in my doctoral study. In this respect too, I am truly indebted to Dr Gunasegaran and family for their generous help, particularly in my first few months of stay in Perth.

I would like to express my gratitude to Dr Tadayuki Miyamoto, Associate Professor Fay Rola-Rubzen for their extensive help with the statistical analysis and thesis writing. My appreciation also goes to Chris Kerin who had helped in the administrative part of my study. The assistance of the academic and non-academic staff at the Department of Higher Degree Research, Curtin Business School, is also gratefully acknowledged.

I am thankful to all my colleagues and friends at the IRBM and the School of Business Law, Curtin University, who have been very supportive and helpful throughout my study.

My appreciation also goes to all IRBM and Australian Taxation Office (ATO) officers, who have participated in this study. Their enthusiasm to take part in both surveys and interviews have contributed significantly to the success of this study.

I also dedicate my thanks to Elaine Miller for proofreading the first draft of my thesis and providing useful suggestions in my thesis writing.

This study would not have been possible without the love, sacrifice and prayers of my beloved wife, Susan and my children, Elyza, Isaac and David. My heartfelt thanks also go to my parents, my parents-in-law, brothers, sisters and all extended families for their love and support.

Last but not least, to those whom I am indebted, but are numerous and cannot be named, thank you very much.

DEDICATION

This thesis is dedicated in memory of my youngest daughter, Mary.

ABSTRACT

The effectiveness of tax investigations is expected to be influenced by the tax authority's ability to plan and enforce its tax investigation system, within the power of the income tax law. Thus, in this context, the main objective of this research is to explore the determinants of effective tax investigations, from the Malaysian Inland Revenue Board's (IRBM) perspective. This study sought to identify factors that may influence the effectiveness of tax investigations, and the nature of their influence, in relation to deterrence of tax non-compliance in Malaysia. In addition, demographic variables such as age, gender, level of education and years of work experience were also examined to support the findings for the main factors, wherever necessary. Six research questions were developed to address the research objectives.

In order to complement the study findings from the IRBM's perspective, a qualitative study was conducted with the Australian Taxation Office (ATO) senior officers, and the results of this study served as the point of reference, wherever possible, for the IRBM in its tax enforcement area.

The study was conducted through two qualitative research methods (interviews) and one quantitative research method (survey) in three stages. The first stage commenced with a qualitative study (IRBM) that was exploratory in nature, and the respondents were the IRBM's Senior Investigation Officers. The second stage involved quantitative study and the respondents were the IRBM's Investigation Officers. The third stage involved qualitative study with the ATO's Senior Officers, which was explanatory in nature.

The findings derived from the aforementioned research methods were analysed and interpreted to address the research questions. It was revealed that professional proficiency, tax enforcement strategies and the severity of tax penalties have a significant influence on the effectiveness of tax investigations. As there was no prior comparable empirical evidence in relation to the issue of this study, its findings contribute to the existing knowledge associated with tax enforcement and deterrence. Professional proficiency of the IRBM officers was found to have the most direct and significant influence on the effectiveness of tax investigation, followed by tax enforcement strategy and severity of tax penalties.

Finally, several implications were identified from the findings of this study. Positively, these implications would usefully serve to help the IRBM to formulate and enhance its tax enforcement system into the future.
